Frances Dean Nolde

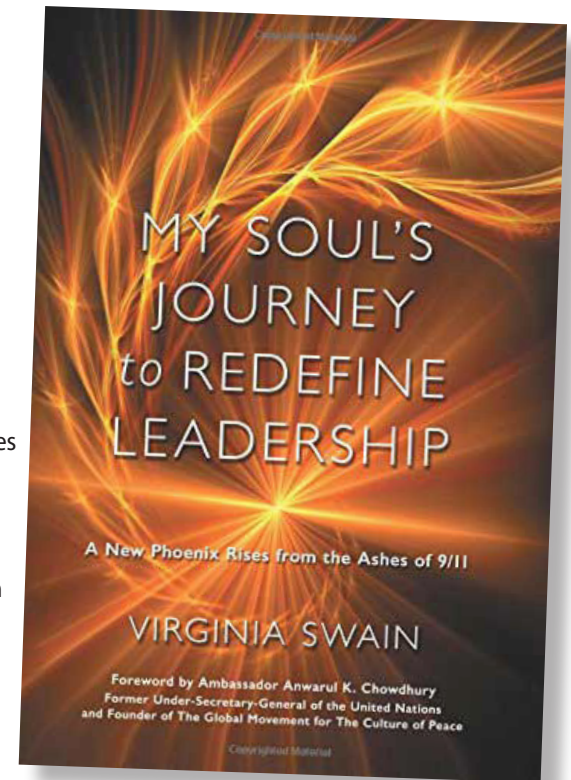

Frances Dean Wilcox Nolde became a pioneer pilot and a World War II commander of the Reading Courier Station in the Pennsylvania Wing of the Civil Air Patrol (CAP). After the war, she was winner of an early transcontinental all-women's air race, and eventually became a full colonel in the CAP in charge of the women's program. After moving to Washington, she became responsible for planning how America's civilian airplanes would defend the country should the Cold War become hot.

Virginia Swain

The story of an ordinary woman with extraordinary experiences, Virginia Swain's soul journey takes her from the devastating loss of her brother to peace, visions of a new future, and – after a harrowing day in New York City on September 11 – a vivid dream of a phoenix rising from a city's ashes, calling her to a new definition of leadership, one of empowerment, reconciliation and peace.

In everything she does, Virginia Swain, MA, draws on her diverse background and experiences, including certified leadership agility coaching, senior management in human resources, marketing and public relations in both corporate and nonprofit organizations, as well as 25 years of training and coaching emerging and seasoned leaders at the United Nations in New York and on five continents.
